INTRODUCTION

This genealogical study is dedicated to the younger generations, in an effort to familiarize them with the wealth and complexity of their family's history and genealogy. It is my hope that this may contribute to a growing awareness of this historic heritage and to a greater sense of belonging to a large family among these younger members.

The Ottoman dynasty has not only greatly influenced but also dominated the history of Asia Minor, of the Near and Middle East, of the Balkans, of the regions bordering the Black Sea, of part of North Africa and of Eastern Europe for centuries, with a remarkable longevity through an uninterrupted direct line of male succession.

The Ottoman dynasty (Âl-i Osman) has ruled over its dominions for over six centuries, possibly from its eponymous founder Osman Bey's first rise to chiefdom in the late thirteenth century to 1922. Its rulers, all Sunni Muslims, also ruled as Caliphs over the Islamic world for over four centuries, from 1517 to 1924. Their multinational empire, which some view as the forerunner of contemporary federal systems, was a major actor in, and contributor to, the civilization of the second millennium of our era.

From the time of the establishment of the Ottoman lineage until the abolition of the sultanate in 1922, thirty-six rulers reigned in succession, all direct descendants of the founder of the dynasty, Osman Bey. Under the first fourteen rulers, for the period of almost three centuries extending from Osman Bey's death in 1324 to Ahmed I's demise in 1617, the succession passed from father to son. As Ahmed I's sons were under age at the time of his death, his brother Mustafa, the eldest of imperial princes, succeeded him, thus initiating a new practice based on the transfer of authority to the eldest male representative of the extended blood line. This system of succession remained in force for another three centuries, until the end of the Empire, in 1922. From the death of Sultan Mehmed VI Vahideddin in 1926 to this day, it has been maintained to determine the head of the dynasty (hanedan reisi).

Throughout history, the Ottoman rulers have carried an impressive number of titles, from the modest Bey (lord) and Gazi (warrior of the faith) of the earlier period to the more ambitious Sultan, Hakan, Han, Hünkâr, Padişah (all variations around the concept of sovereign and emperor), especially after the conquest of Constantinople in 1453, or to the more religiously minded ones of Halife-i Müslimin (Caliph of all Muslims), Hadimü'l-Haremeyn (Servant of the two Holy Places [of Mecca and Medina]), or Emiru'l-Mu'minin (Commander of the Faithful) following the conquest of Egypt in 1517.

The princes of imperial blood are called şehzade (literally son of a shah); they bear the honorific title of Efendi after their name, and their rank corresponds to that of Imperial Highness in the west. Their female counterparts, the imperial princesses, are called sultan, a title which follows their name (not to be confused with the title of the sovereign, which precedes the name); they have the rank of Imperial Highness, which they retain after their marriage.

The spouses of members of the dynasty benefited from a special status deriving from this union. For the period we are concerned with, the wives of a reigning sultan, generally limited to the canonical number of four, were given the title of Kadınefendi and the rank of Majesty. The first of these wives, in chronological order of marriage, received the title of Başkadınefendi (Head or First Kadınefendi). The following wives of the sultan, from the fifth downwards, were given the title of İkbal (Favorite) and the rank of Highness, the position of Baş İkbal being reserved to the first among them. Those wives whose son eventually became sultan were confirmed in the highest female status of the dynasty, that of Valide Sultan (Queen Mother), with corresponding rank of Imperial Majesty.

Male consorts, namely the husbands of imperial princesses (Sultan) received the title of Damad (Son-in-law) or, more precisely, Damad-ı Şehriyari (Imperial son-in-law), and the rank of Highness, and were forbidden to take another wife and forced to divorce former ones. Contrary to marriages involving imperial princes (Şehzade), where the male lineage guaranteed the preservation of the title throughout generations of male descendants, children issued from the marriage of an imperial princess with a damad were given the titles of Beyzade or Sultanzade for men, and of Hanım Sultan for women, both with the rank of Highness, and with no possibility to transfer any form of title to their own descendants.

The present head of the House of Osman and its representative is the great grandson of Sultan Abdülmecid: Osman Bayazid Efendi, son of İbrahim Tevfik Efendi, son of Burhaneddin Efendi, son of Sultan Abdülmecid. In accordance with the system of succession established by tradition, he succeeded his cousin Ertuğrul Osman Efendi, son of Mehmed Burhaneddin Efendi, son of Sultan Abdülhamid II, upon his demise on 23 September 2009.

This publication has greatly benefited from a number of earlier works on the Ottoman dynasty and family: Anthony-Dolphin Alderson's The Structure of the Ottoman Dynasty (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1956); Çağatay M. Uluçay's Padişahların Kadınları ve Kızları (Ankara: Türk Tarih Kurumu, 1980); Yılmaz Öztuna's Devletler ve Hanedanlar (Ankara: Kültür Bakanlığı, 1989); and Osman Selaheddin Osmanoğlu's The Ottoman Family (Istanbul: ISAR, 1999). All this work would have been impossible without Mr. İbrahim Pazan's very systematic and meticulous updating and editing. I must also thank Kenize Mourad for giving this project the thrust necessary for its completion.

The bulk of this publication is devoted to the genealogy of the Ottoman family, starting from Sultan Mahmud II (1785-1839, r. 1808-1839), a logical choice if one considers that he was the only surviving male member of the dynasty following the death of his brother, Sultan Mustafa IV, on 16 November 1808. The structure of this genealogical work follows the dynastic sequence, with a separate section devoted to each of the branches stemming from the seven sultans who have reigned from 1808 to 1839 — Mahmud II, Abdülmecid, Abdülaziz, Murad V, Abdülhamid II, Mehmed V Reşad, and Mehmed VI Vahideddin — and to the last caliph, Abdülmecid (1922-1924).

Given the subject matter, this modest work is bound to always remain incomplete and will need to be regularly updated. Moreover, despite all our efforts, the readers will inevitably find a number of errors and omissions; I can only hope that they will forgive us for these involuntary mistakes. This work was to a large extent a collective and collaborative work, in which a large number of family members were involved, far too many to be listed individually here. Without their cooperation, this publication would not have been possible. May they be warmly thanked.

NOTES ON FORM AND CONTENT

Nothing is more complicated than to make easily comprehensible a genealogical chart. This is all the more true when one has to deal with such a complex family as the House of Osman. True, the arbitrary but understandable choice that was made to take Mahmud II as the common and unique ancestor of the present family does reduce the chart to a somewhat more manageable size — at the price of losing track of quite a number of descendants of his 29 predecessors — but this advantage is considerably offset by the decision that was made of including all family members rather than members of the dynasty alone. Indeed, one needs to remember that the Ottoman dynastic system was dominantly patriarchal and patrilineal, allowing for only two successive generations of women to hold a dynastic title, while male lineage constituted the only legitimate base of rule and dynastic membership. Had the Ottoman dynastic standards been kept, this booklet would have included only the names of princes and princesses of the blood and of their spouses (*şehzade*s and *sultan*s, together with *hanımefendi*s and *damad*s), and those of princes and princesses born to princesses of the blood (*sultanzade*s or *beyzade*s and *hanım sultan*s). The objective, however, being to draw as complete a picture as possible of the Ottoman family, rather than the dynasty, every single individual has been included, regardless of rank and title. Arbitrary as it may be, this choice can be justified by the fact that rank and titles no longer bear the meaning they had when the dynasty was still ruling the empire that bore its name. Ever since the downfall of the sultanate, on November 1, 1922, and that of the caliphate, on March 3, 1924, the members of the dynasty have made it clear that they had relinquished any kind of claim to political power in Turkey.

Nevertheless, outdated as it may have been, there was no reason to discard the dynastic protocol altogether. That is why we have tried to combine this very inclusive definition of the family with a clear distinction of rank and title for those members who did belong to the dynasty. Given the impractical side of constantly repeating the titles of every individual, we have preferred to create typographic distinctions between individuals of different rank and gender. To make these distinctions somewhat consistent, we have tried to set some general rules that could easily be identified by the reader. Thus, gender is systematically indicated by roman (male) versus italic (female) typeface; members of the dynasty would be characterized by bold characters against regular for non-members; individuals acquiring dynastic titles through marriage would have their names underlined; finally the rank of all members of the dynasty would be reflected in typographic case, namely all capitals, small capitals, and lower-case. This 'system' can be summarized in the following two tables: the first shows all the possible ranks within the family, and their corresponding titles; the second is a purely hypothetical genealogical chart which places these ranks and titles in the context of vertical (lineage) and horizontal (marriage) relations.

TABLE I – POSSIBLE RANKS AND TITLES

Rank	Male member	Spouse	Female member	Spouse
Imperial Majesty	MEHMED Sultan/Padishah	FATMA Valide Sultan
Majesty		FATMA Başkadınefendi FATMA Kadınefendi or İkbal
Imperial Highness	MEHMED Şehzade	Fatma Hanımefendi	FATMA Sultan	Mehmed Damad
Highness	Mehmed Beyzade/Sultanzade	Fatma	Fatma Hanım Sultan	Mehmed
None	Mehmed		Fatma

No system is perfect, and this one certainly constitutes no exception to this rule, if only because of the complexity of the Ottoman family and of the very peculiar historical and cultural circumstances in which it evolved throughout the period of almost two centuries covered in this work. The spelling and format of names is probably the most striking aspect of this problem. The passage from the Arabic script to the Latin alphabet in 1928, as a result of the reforms undergone by the Republic of Turkey, has modified to a certain extent the way in which some names were written, as best illustrated by the replacement of the final 'd' by 't': Mehmed thus became Mehmet, and Ahmed, Ahmet. Given the impossibility of finding a perfect solution to this problem, we have opted for a pragmatic solution: the names of individuals who died before the language reform have been spelled the 'old' way, and those of the younger generations have been adapted to whatever form was chosen by the person in question. This also explains that the names of some family members who grew up outside of Turkey and have often acquired a foreign nationality have been rendered in whatever way the said person used it, regardless of what may have been the 'correct' Turkish spelling.

Somewhat related to this issue is the question of surnames, which were introduced in Turkey only in 1934. Given the importance and universality of this practice today, it was necessary to integrate surnames into the system, and the most logical way to do so was by resorting to the widely used convention of capitalization. This in turn created additional problems, given that the same typographic distinction was used to mark certain ranks, namely that of reigning sovereigns, of their mothers and of their first wives. True, the risk of confusion was minimal, considering the extreme rarity of these three specific ranks; at any rate, it will suffice to remind the reader that for individuals with a surname, typographic distinctions relating to upper or lower case should be sought in the given name(s), and not in the surname. It should also be noted in passing that despite some efforts at unifying direct male descendants around a common surname "Osmanoğlu" (son of Osman), there are considerable variations in this practice, from the use of variants of this surname to that of totally different surnames, and to the use of this particular surname by family members who are not direct male descendants.

As mentioned earlier, the idea behind the use of typographic referencing was to avoid the use of heavy and repetitive titles. Given the relative simplicity of the system, we hope that the reader will be able to 'place' individuals along the dynastic hierarchy rather easily. It should not be too difficult to see the logic in the distinction between a sovereign, MEHMED; princes and princesses of the blood, MEHMED and FATMA; princes and princesses of second rank, Mehmed and Fatma; and simple descendants, Mehmed and Fatma. One should be warned, however, that the corresponding ranks of Imperial Majesty, Majesty, Imperial Highness, or Highness are approximations that were designed in the nineteenth century to provide some ground for equivalence with European monarchic terminology.

The real titles used in the Ottoman protocol, such as devletlû necabetlû for princes of the blood or devletlû ismetlû for princesses of the same rank, have been left out, as they would have most likely created yet more confusion in an already rather complex layout.

While genealogy is generally most clearly perceived in chart-like formats that reproduce the arborescences of a family, it was clearly impossible to use such a layout for this particular family. The difficulty resided not so much in the number of individuals and the consequent complexity of the chart, as in the fact that we were intent on providing the reader with a standard number of biographical data concerning each individual: date and place of birth, date and place of death, place of burial, date and place of marriage, as well as the same basic information for spouse(s). To this we should add, for those born to parents who were either polygamous or married several times, the necessity to give the name of the parent who needed to be specified. For a small number of spouses, an additional mention is also made of their lineage, whenever this was deemed to be relevant, mostly due to some form of social or political prominence. Such references, however, were kept at a minimal level and no matrimonial link has resulted in a genealogical digression into another family structure, however important it may have been.

Obviously, it was impossible to obtain all of the data described above for each and every individual; nevertheless, every member ended up constituting an entry of a size varying between a line and a paragraph, thus making it impossible to integrate them in any other layout than a continuous list of individual entries. The only way that such a format could be made compatible with a genealogical structure was by numbering individuals according to a generational sequence and indenting their entries according to the same logic. Individuals were thus numbered by reference to the sequence of their ancestors, starting with the children of Sultan Mahmud II, who constituted "generation 0" from the perspective of this compilation. Every generation would thus be represented by a number, corresponding to the birth order of a child among all his siblings, and separated from the following generation by a dot. To give a concrete and purely hypothetical example, 5.1.3.2.1.1. would be the number attributed to the first child of the first child of the second child of the third child of the first child of the fifth child of Mahmud II. To each generational sequence also corresponds an indentation in the layout, which allows for a certain degree of visualisation of generational parallels, at least within a same page.

Generally speaking, the youngest generation of the family stands separated from Mahmud II by about seven generations. For obvious reasons, considerable variations are observed in this respect. For the time being, the greatest number of generations reached is of nine; the princes and princesses of the blood that are most remote from the common ancestor represent the eighth generation. In other words, both the Ottoman family and the dynasty seem to be safe from any major threat of extinction.

For reasons of clarity and of consistency with the dynastic logic, the ruling sovereigns, namely Sultans Abdülmecid, Abdülaziz, Murad V, Abdülhamid II, Mehmed V Reşad, and Mehmed VI Vahideddin, as well as the last Caliph Abdülmecid, have each been taken as the starting point of a new geneaological chart. This explains that the descendants of, say, a younger and non-reigning brother or sister of Abdülhamid II should appear before the latter's descendants, who would be listed under his own dynastic section. A choice needed also to be made when it came to listing the issue of marriages between two members of the dynasty in order to avoid the repetition of a whole group of descendants under two different sections. We have chosen the dynastically consistent solution of favoring the male side of such couples with more than just one generation of descendants — of which there are only two, in total — and of adding a crossreference to that effect under the female side of the same union.

It may be meaningful to conclude by evoking the overall scope and possible evolution of the present work. As mentioned earlier, the objective was to provide the reader with a detailed list of family and dynasty members, past and present, as well as with a number of basic facts and figures for each individual listed. Nevertheless, there still remain many lacunae and, most certainly, numerous errors that need to be corrected. Our hope is that this modest contribution may trigger some feedback that will eventually help us update our data.

LAWS CONCERNING THE DYNASTY

A number of laws have been passed by the Grand National Assembly in Ankara with direct or indirect consequences on the Ottoman dynasty and family. The first of these was Law 308, passed on November 1, 1922, concerning the abolition of the Sultanate:

1. In virtue of the Fundamental Law the sovereign rights of the Turkish people are vested in an inalienable, undivided, and irrevocable manner in the moral person of the Grand National Assembly as the sole and true emanation of the people. The Assembly has decided not to recognize any other body or power not issuing from itself and not based upon national sovereignty. Therefore it does not recognize within the frontiers defined in the National Pact, any other form of government than that of the Grand National Assembly. Consequently, the Turkish people consider that the form of government existing at Constantinople and based upon personal sovereignty has been relegated to the past from March 16, 1920, until the end of time.
2. The Caliphate belonging to the House of Osman, the Grand National Assembly will choose for the office of Caliph the most intellectually and morally capable and suitable member of the Imperial family. The Turkish State is the foundation of the Caliphate.

A few months later, on April 15, 1923, Law 335 widened the definition of high treason as stated in Law 2 on High Treason, dated April 29, 1920, by including "any opposition through the press to the abolition of the Sultanate and to the legitimacy of the Grand National Assembly." Law 2 on High Treason remained in force until April 12, 1991, when it was abrogated following the promulgation of Law 3713 on the Fight against Terrorism.

The most radical law, however, whose impact was felt on the entire family, was Law 431 on the Abolition of the Caliphate and the banishment from the Republic of Turkey of the Ottoman Dynasty, passed on March 3, 1924:

1. The Caliph has been deposed. As the Caliphate is essentially contained in the meaning and idea of the government and of the Republic, the office of the Caliphate is abolished.
2. The deposed Caliph and all the male and female members and sons-in-law of the dynasty of the bygone Ottoman Sultanate are forever banned from the right to reside within the lands of the Republic of Turkey. Those who are born to women belonging to this dynasty are also subjected to the requirements of this article.

3. Those persons referred to in Article Two are forced to leave the lands of the Republic Turkey within a maximum of ten days following the promulgation of this law.
4. The Turkish nationality and rights of the persons referred to in Article Two are abolished.
5. The persons referred to in Article Two shall no longer have the right to possess immovable property within the borders of the Republic of Turkey. They may for one year apply by proxy to the tribunals of the State in order to sever their links [to such property].
6. For their travel expenses, the persons referred to in Article Two shall receive for one single time a varying sum determined by the government according to their degree of wealth.
7. The persons referred to in Article Two are forced to liquidate within a year all of their immovable property within the lands of the Republic of Turkey within the knowledge and with the approval of the government. If they fail to liquidate the said immovable property, it shall be liquidated with the mediation of the government and its produce handed over to them.
8. The immovable property, registered within the lands of the Republic of Turkey, of individuals who have reigned as sultans in the Ottoman Empire have reverted to the people.
9. The furniture, services, paintings, objects of art and all other movable property contained in the palaces, mansions and other buildings of the abolished Sultanate have reverted to the people.
10. Together with the property previously known under the name of Imperial Estates and already transferred to the people, all the real estate belonging to the abolished Sultanate, the former Imperial Treasury, and the palaces, mansions, buildings and real estate, with their contents, have reverted to the people.
11. A bylaw shall be made to regulate the inventory and preservation of the movable and immovable property that has reverted to the people.
12. This law shall be in force from the date of its promulgation.

The strong measures taken against the members of the dynasty were maintained in all their force throughout the initial period of the Republic, until the death of its founder, Mustafa Kemal Atatürk, in 1938. In fact, a particular effort was made to ensure that the severity of the banishment was maintained. Article 13 of the Amnesty Law 2330, promulgated on October 26, 1933, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Republic, made it clear that it did not include the individuals targeted by the law of 1924.

The first relaxation to the exile law came in the form of an exceptional law promulgated for five specific individuals: Law 3662, dated July 11, 1939, on the "Return to Turkey of Mahpeyker, Türkân, Ali, Rana, and Hümeyra." Article One of this law clearly consisted of an amnesty granted to the five individuals named above: "Mahpeyker, Türkân and Ali, the children of the late General Enver, together with Rana, the daughter of his brother Kâmil, and Hümeyra, the daughter of İsmail Hakkı, have been admitted into the Turkish nationality, and allowed to return to Turkey." The five people concerned by this law were all sons and daughters of princesses of the blood (sultan). The first four were the children of Emine Naciye Sultan (26.39.2, 1896-1957), namely Mahpeyker Enver (26.39.2.1, 1917-2000), Türkân Enver (26.39.2.2, 1919-1989), Ali Enver (26.39.2.3, 1921-1971), and Rana Killigil (26.39.2.4, 1926-2008); the last one was the daughter of Fatma Ulviye Sultan (26.40.2, 1892-1967), Suade Hümeyra Okday (26.40.2.1, 1917-2000). However, if these five individuals had been singled out, it was not because of their mothers, but rather of their fathers, considered to have been national heroes. Emine Naciye Sultan had been married to the famous Young Turk leader, İsmail Enver Pasha (1881-1922), Chief of Staff and War Minister from 1914 to 1918; as to Ulviye Sultan, her first husband had been İsmail Hakkı Okday (1881-1977), who, apart from serving in the army during the Great War, had joined the nationalist forces during the War of Independence. For the sake of consistency, Rana Killigil, who was not Enver Pasha's, but his brother Kâmil Killigil's (1898-1962) daughter, from his marriage to Naciye Sultan after the pasha's death, was assimilated with her half-sisters and brother and included in the amnesty law.

A second step in this process of relaxation took place ten years later, with Law 5370, dated April 18, 1949, and concerning certain amendments to be brought to the Law 3519 on Passports. In fact, these amendments had nothing to do with passports, but with allowing reentry into the country to certain individuals who had been exiled in 1924. Article One defined these individuals: "Those persons of both sexes who are not born members of the abolished Ottoman dynasty and have been married to one such member, but who are either divorced or widowed and have no issue may be allowed to return to Turkey, depending on a decision of the Council of Ministers." Clearly, what was meant, then, was that the dynasty's in-laws — women married to princes and men married to princesses, in other words *kadınefendi*s, *hanımefendi*s and *damad*s — would be allowed back in Turkey if they had lost or divorced their spouse and had no issue from that marriage. To avoid any risk of property claims, the article further specified that these individuals could not lay any claim on imperial property and on those assets specified in articles 8 and 10 of the 1924 law. Article Two concerned a special clause designed for female members of the dynasty, who, due to the status of their husband, might find themselves in the obligation of spending a short period of time in Turkey: "Among women born as members of the abolished Ottoman dynasty, those who are married to a foreign head of state, to a member of a foreign dynasty, or to an ambassador or to a person entrusted with an ambassadorial post, may be allowed to transit through Turkey or to reside in Turkey for up to three months, depending on a decision of the Council of Ministers." Law 5371, voted on the same day of April 18, 1949, adapted the changes to the Law on Passports, by specifying that those individuals who were allowed to return to Turkey according to the provisions of Law 5370 could be granted Turkish nationality, again upon condition of a decision by the Council of Ministers.

Yet it was only in 1952 that a major and comprehensive modification was brought to the law that had condemned the dynasty to exile. On June 16, 1952, the Grand National Assembly voted Law 5958 on the "Amendment of Article Two of Law 431 Concerning the Abolition of the Caliphate and the Banishment of the Ottoman Dynasty from the Lands of the Republic of Turkey, and the Addition of Certain Articles to the Same Law." As clearly stated in the new Article Two, the object of this amendment was to revoke the measure of exile for female members of the dynasty and their issue, leaving it in force only for the male members of direct male descent:

> Article Two. The male members descending from the sultans of the abolished Caliphate and from the abolished Ottoman Sultanate, as well as their own male descent, are forbidden from coming to Turkey and of transiting through Turkey. Those who are not contained in this group may come to Turkey.
> Additional Article One. If those who may come to Turkey by virtue of Article Two request it, the Council of Ministers may grant them Turkish nationality, regardless of their coming to, or residing in, Turkey.
> Additional Article Two. Those who benefit from the clauses of Article Two may acquire property within the prevailing general conditions, starting with the promulgation of this law. In the event of the death of an individual having acquired property in Turkey under these conditions, the shares pertaining to those of his or her heirs who cannot benefit from Article Two shall be liquidated in court and their produce handed over to them.
> Additional Article Three. Those who enjoy the right to return to the country by virtue of this law cannot lay claim, by inheritance or any other way, on the movable and immovable property that has reverted to the people on the basis of the decrees of August 27, 1324 and April 20, 1325, of Law 431, and of the Grand National Assembly's commentary 245.
> Additional Article Four. Those who return to Turkey or acquire Turkish nationality are forbidden from using the mentions and titles such as sultan, hanım sultan, kadınefendi, prince, and princess, evoking the dynasty. Those of the beneficiaries of Article Two who shall go against this prohibition shall be condemned to six months to two years of prison; and those who shall use these titles in favor of these individuals shall be condemned to three months to one year of prison.

The final step in the normalization of the dynasty's status came some twenty years later, in 1974. This time, the issue was to lift the last measure that remained in force against the members of the dynasty, namely the exile of its members of direct male descent. However, rather than a separate law for this particular purpose, the Grand National Assembly chose to incorporate this matter into a general amnesty law drafted on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Republic. Interestingly enough, although the law itself did not pass, Article Eight was accepted and published on May 18, 1974, thus putting an end to fifty years of exile for the remaining male members of the dynasty:

> Article Eight. Articles 2, 3, 4 and 5 of Law 431 dated 26 Receb 1342 and March 3, 1924, amended by Law 5958 dated June 16, 1952, have been abrogated. The male members [of the dynasty] wishing to benefit from this circumstance shall be granted the same rights as the female members according to Law 5958 amending Law 431.

Since then, a considerable number of male members of the dynasty have returned to Turkey, many of them settling and eventually obtaining Turkish citizenship. Technically, then, there remains no longer any legal measure or limitation against members of the Ottoman dynasty and family.

A NOTE ON ABBREVIATIONS AND PLACE NAMES

In order to avoid unnecessary lengths in the text, we have used a number of abbreviations and conventions in the individual entries. The following are the abbreviations used:

b.	born
bur.	buried
d.	died
div.	divorced
dt.	daughter
m.	married
marr.	marriage
maus.	mausoleum
r.	reigned
s.	son

Place names are given, whenever available, for birth, marriage, death, and burial. We have tried, moreover, to be as precise as possible in this respect. Nevertheless we admit to a double standard between Istanbul and the rest of the world. Indeed, in the case of the Ottoman capital, a special care has been given to identify certain locations — districts, palaces, mansions, mosques, mausoleums, cemeteries — with a level of precision that was not possible (or relevant) for other places. Moreover, assuming that the reader would be somewhat familiar with the historical topography of Istanbul, we have not added the city name after basic districts such as Beşiktaş, Eyüp, or Çemberlitaş. In other cases, we have tried to be as consistent as possible and add a country or region name only if the locality was relatively less known.
